

September 7, 2020

The Federal Reserve changes the rules

At the latest Fed meeting, Jay Powell confirmed that the Fed was prepared to tolerate higher inflation as it steers the economy through the aftermath of the coronavirus pandemic. He also announced major shifts in how the central bank guides the economy, signalling it will make job growth pre-eminent and will not raise interest rates to guard against coming inflation just because the unemployment rate is low.

In emphasizing the importance of a strong labour market and the tolerance of faster price gains, Mr Powell laid the groundwork for years of low interest rates which could translate into long periods of cheap mortgages and business loans that foster strong demand and a solid job market.

The central bank is formally shifting its inflation approach, aiming to average 2% inflation over time, rather than as an absolute goal. In doing so, the Fed is trying to convince the public and investors that it will also allow prices to rise a little bit faster. Higher inflation may seem like an odd goal to anyone who buys groceries or pays rent, but excessively weak prices and weak gains can actually have damaging effects on the economy. A circle of stagnation has played out in countries including Japan, in which lower price gains leave less room to cut rates, limiting policymakers' ability to stimulate the economy and revive inflation.

But by establishing the new rules, several questions and criticism were raised:

FIRSTLY, WHILE THE FED HAS DEMONSTRATED IMMENSE POWER TO MOVE MARKETS AND ASSET PRICES OVER THE LAST DECADE, IT HAS SHOWN NO SIMILAR POWER OVER THE ECONOMY; SO WHY WOULD IT BE DIFFERENT THIS TIME AROUND?

Its conventional tools are no longer enough to push inflation permanently above 2%. As the Fed has not yet revealed the details on how inflation could be coaxed above 2%, investors rightly believe that it will simply be more dovish than before. It is doubtful that this alone will steer inflation above 2%.

SECONDLY, WHAT WILL THIS NEW SHIFT RESULT IN LONGER TERM?

Over years, the Fed's argument was that the persistence of low inflation is consistent with low unemployment. In reality, inflation has remained sub-2% because the Fed's policies have failed to stimulate a persistent increase in nominal GDP above productive capacity, so that, with little excess demand, there is only a modest inflation. But will the Fed's ultra-easy policies actually stimulate accelerating economic activity, or just pump up asset prices and make the stock market happy?

In our opinion in longer term, the Fed's new shift is a commitment to liquidity supports, supportive of stronger stocks, and a weaker dollar (which will also be beneficial to the emerging markets). The new Fed framework is expected to allow the US yield curve to steepen. The jury is still out on that perspective. With the Fed more tolerant on potential inflation overshoots, short-term rates are going to be anchored at low levels for longer, potentially constraining upward moves in long rates. A continued flat yield curve and low rates will probably prolong current trends within the stock market, with financial shares being clobbered, and growth beating value.

Lastly, is this shift open the door to political interference?

For most economist that have been working with inflation targeting as a monetary policy framework, the recent policy shift by the US Federal Reserve to using an average of past inflation rates as the target, is sensible.

Despite the announcement of an inflation target, it is true that most central banks have kept an eye on past and expected future inflation rates in setting interest rates. The recent announcement makes this official but avoids announcing the averaging period explicitly, reducing transparency, which was one the objectives of the inflation targeting framework.

Nevertheless, averaging of inflation rates may also allow for a shift in the inflation transmission mechanism, with the resulting uncertainty in the leads and lags between tight labour markets and wage inflation and tight product markets and product price inflation. Against this backdrop, the new framework of using averages sensibly gives more room for judgment in policymaking and political interference.

Food for thought...

Disclaimer

All financial data and/or economic information released by this Publication (the "Publication"); (the "Data" or the "Financial data and/or economic information"), are provided for information purposes only, without warranty of any kind, including without limitation the warranties of merchantability, fitness for a particular purpose or warranties and non-infringement of any patent, intellectual property or proprietary rights of any party, and are not intended for trading purposes. Banque Internationale à Luxembourg SA (the "Bank") does not guarantee expressly or impliedly, the sequence, accuracy, adequacy, legality, completeness, reliability, usefulness or timeliness of any Data. All Financial data and/or economic information provided may be delayed or may contain errors or be incomplete. This disclaimer applies to both isolated and aggregate uses of the Data. All Data is provided on an "as is" basis. None of the Financial data and/or economic information contained on this Publication constitutes a solicitation, offer, opinion, or recommendation, a guarantee of results, nor a solicitation by the Bank of an offer to buy or sell any security, products and services mentioned into it or to make investments. Moreover, none of the Financial data and/or economic information contained on this Publication provides legal, tax accounting, financial or investment advice or services regarding the profitability or suitability of any security or investment. This Publication has not been prepared with the aim to take an investor's particular investment objectives, financial position or needs into account. It is up to the investor himself to consider whether the Data contained herein this Publication is appropriate to his needs, financial position and objectives or to seek professional independent advice before making an investment decision based upon the Data. No investment decision whatsoever may result from solely reading this document. In order to read and understand the Financial data and/or economic information included in this document, you will need to have knowledge and experience of financial markets. If this is not the case, please contact your relationship manager. This Publication is prepared by the Bank and is based on data available to the public and upon information from sources believed to be reliable and accurate, taken from stock exchanges and third parties. The Bank, including its parent, - subsidiary or affiliate entities, agents, directors, officers, employees, representatives or suppliers, shall not, directly or indirectly, be liable, in any way, for any: inaccuracies or errors in or omissions from the Financial data and/or economic information, including but not limited to financial data regardless of the cause of such or for any investment decision made, action taken, or action not taken of whatever nature in reliance upon any Data provided herein, nor for any loss or damage, direct or indirect, special or consequential, arising from any use of this Publication or of its content. This Publication is only valid at the moment of its editing, unless otherwise specified. All Financial data and/or economic information contained herein can also quickly become out-of-date. All Data is subject to change without notice and may not be incorporated in any new version of this Publication. The Bank has no obligation to update this Publication upon the availability of new data, the occurrence of new events and/or other evolutions. Before making an investment decision, the investor must read carefully the terms and conditions of the documentation relating to the specific products or services. Past performance is no guarantee of future performance. Products or services described in this Publication may not be available in all countries and may be subject to restrictions in some persons or in some countries. No part of this Publication may be reproduced, distributed, modified, linked to or used for any public or commercial purpose without the prior written consent of the Bank. In any case, all Financial data and/or economic information provided on this Publication are not intended for use by, or distribution to, any person or entity in any jurisdiction or country where such use or distribution would be contrary to law and/or regulation. If you have obtained this Publication from a source other than the Bank website, be aware that electronic documentation can be altered subsequent to original distribution.

As economic conditions are subject to change, the information and opinions presented in this outlook are current only as of the date indicated in the matrix or the publication date. This publication is based on data available to the public and upon information that is considered as reliable. Even if particular attention has been paid to its content, no guarantee, warranty or representation is given to the accuracy or completeness thereof. Banque Internationale à Luxembourg cannot be held liable or responsible with respect to the information expressed herein. This document has been prepared only for information purposes and does not constitute an offer or invitation to make investments. It is up to investors themselves to consider whether the information contained herein is appropriate to their needs and objectives or to seek advice before making an investment decision based upon this information. Banque Internationale à Luxembourg accepts no liability whatsoever for any investment decisions of whatever nature by the user of this publication, which are in any way based on this publication, nor for any loss or damage arising from any use of this publication or its content. This publication, prepared by Banque Internationale à Luxembourg (BIL), may not be copied or duplicated in any form whatsoever or redistributed without the prior written consent of BIL 69, route d'Esch | L-2953 Luxembourg | RCS Luxembourg B-6307 | Tel. +352 4590 6699 | www.bil.com.